Proyecto RTB Solar de 150 MW

Montenegro, un pequeño país balcánico, está adoptando cada vez más la energía solar como componente clave de su estrategia de energías renovables. Con abundante sol durante todo el año, el potencial de los proyectos solares es significativo. El gobierno montenegrino ha introducido diversos incentivos para fomentar la inversión en energía solar, como tarifas de alimentación y ayudas a las instalaciones fotovoltaicas.

Entre los proyectos más destacados está la central solar a gran escala de Crnogorski, que pretende contribuir sustancialmente a la red nacional. Las iniciativas solares a menor escala, incluidas las instalaciones en tejados de edificios residenciales y comerciales, también están ganando adeptos, fomentando la independencia energética y la sostenibilidad.

Además, el compromiso de Montenegro con la integración en la UE ha impulsado el desarrollo de las tecnologías renovables, alineándose con las políticas energéticas europeas. Esta apuesta por la energía solar no sólo ayuda a diversificar la combinación energética, sino que también mitiga el impacto medioambiental, contribuyendo al objetivo del país de reducir las emisiones de gases de efecto invernadero. A medida que aumenten la concienciación y la inversión, Montenegro está preparado para convertirse en líder regional en la utilización de la energía solar.
